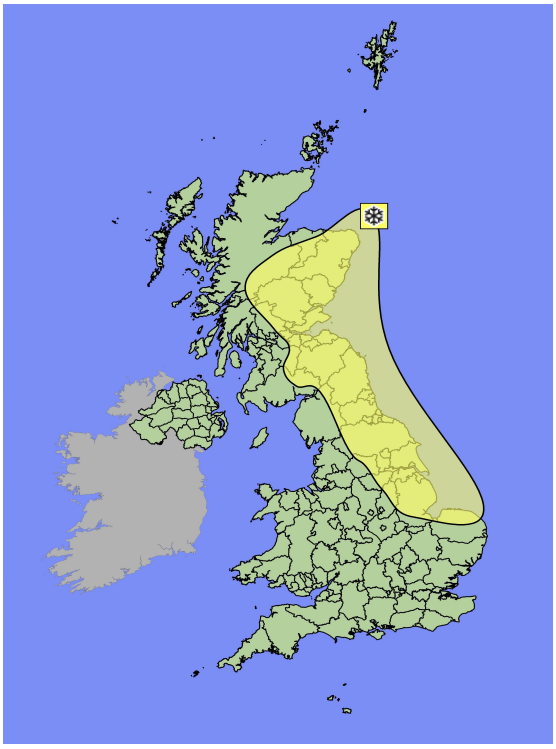
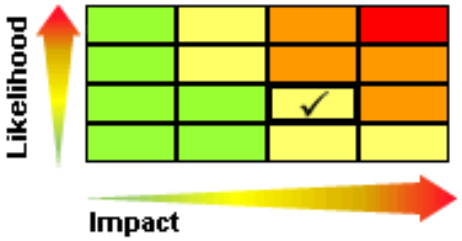
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A frontal zone affecting much of east and southeast England and the Midlands during Sunday is expected to clear eastern England during the early hours of Monday and affect northeastern England and eastern Scotland for much of Monday. This frontal zone will lead to snow inland with accumulations of 5-10 cm possible above 200 m and in excess of 20 cm above 300 m or so. Blizzards are also likely over high ground in northern England and Scotland. Meanwhile, over lower-lying coastal areas, a mixture of rain, sleet and snow is expected so any accumulations here are expected to be small and patchier in nature. Strong easterly winds may also lead to over-topping of waves in some eastern Scottish coastal areas.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Mon, 21st Jan 2013 until 23:59 on Mon, 21st Jan 2013

A band of snow is expected to affect parts of eastern and northern England as well as parts of southern and eastern Scotland on Monday. Over lower lying coastal areas accumulations are expected to be small whilst inland accumulations of 2-5cm are widely expected. Above 200 m in excess of 10 cm is possible. The public should be aware of the risk of disruption to travel.
This warning has been updated to include eastern parts of Cumbria as well as to extend further west across Yorkshire and southern Scotland.
